AN INDEPENDENT JOURNAL OF THE OUTDOORS

FIELDNOTES

VOLUME 01

AUTUMN 2026

A study in quiet places.

Small journeys. A different way of seeing.

FOREST / WATER / SHELTER

The art of paying attention.

The places that stay with us are often the quietest.
A path between trees. The edge of a lake at first light.
A room with a window open to the weather.

This journal is an invitation to look a little longer. We follow the soft line of a horizon and listen for the spaces between sounds. Nothing here asks to be hurried. There is no perfect route to take.

Take these pages as field notes, unfinished and open.
Find a place to sit. Notice the changing light.
Begin wherever you are.

With curiosity,

The Fieldnotes studio

Original writing and illustrations. Made for this demo.

Where the world softens.

A walk beneath the canopy

Fig. 01 / A trail shaped by light. Original landscape illustration.

Follow the softer path.

The forest changes the scale of things.
A leaf becomes a small landscape.
The smallest sounds travel further:
a branch, a wing, a drop of water.

There is a rhythm here that does not belong to clocks. Walk until you find yourself moving with it.

Stop where the path opens.
Look toward the brightest patch of sky. Follow the layers of green until they become separate trees.

Attention is a kind of arrival.
You do not have to travel far to find a place worth noticing.

“

There is a kind of clarity that only arrives when we slow down.

NOTES FROM A MORNING WALK

Water holds the sky.

Tahoe, Walker and Mono lakes from orbit / NASA, ISS064-E-9397

Stillness has its own movement.

The lake is never quite the same color twice. A passing cloud changes everything. We stayed on the shore until the reflected mountains and the real ones seemed equally close.